

TCU, Baylor, Texas In Week's Spotlight

By DENNIS ASHTON
Thresher Staff

The TCU Skiff reports the story of a young coed who walked into one of her classes for the first time during the spring semester, and noticed a young man with whom she was acquainted sitting on the back row, she greeted him and started to sit down.

Then she stopped. "Do you cheat?" she asked.

"Well, yes," he answered.

"Good," she replied and she sat down next to him.

* * *

Sixteen outstanding professional men and ministers have accepted invitations to participate in Baylor's annual Focus Week, February 22-28, The Baylor Lariat reports.

Speakers include the Honorable Zollie Steakley, Secretary of State of Texas, Dr. C. K. Pepper, chaplain supervisor of the Dallas County Hospital District, and Dr. Clarence Cranford, former president of the American Baptist Convention.

Topics to be discussed in the morning and afternoon seminars will range from "Common Sense

Courting" and "Marriage is for the Mature" to "Christian Influence is Literature, Music and Drama."

* * *

Through a technical mixup, a televised lesson in Japanese was fed through closed-circuit television Thursday night to an apparently dark and empty chemistry lecture room at the University of Texas, the Daily Texan reports.

Meanwhile, some thirty eager students of Japanese bided their time in Batts Hall, watching "The Real McCoys." As soon as the error was detected, the pre-recorded tape was switched to the proper channel.

But before the trouble was found out, one man commented "Dami Dami, Takusan Ami!" Or as he translated, "The ball game has been rained out!"